Lieutenant Conder explored the region and found the cliffs so bold and the ravines so deep and difficult to cross that he was over four hours in riding six miles. There is a long ravine with many smaller branches and large caves in the sides, about four or five miles north of En-gedi, which is most probably the scene of the incident in this lesson. The cliffs are about fourteen hundred feet higher than the plain, and two thousand feet above the Dead Sea. Saul came to the caves used as sheepcotes, and entered one of them alone, not knowing that David and his men were in the deeper recesses of the same cave beyond him (v. 3). W. M. Thomson tells how it is impossible for one just entering such a cave to see beyond him into the darker depths of the cave, even for a few feet, while those some time within the recesses could see clearly every movement of a new-comer. Thus David s band, seeing Saul within their power, urged him to accept it as providential, and to slay his enemy. David was partly persuaded; silently he stepped forward, and without Saul s knowledge cut off a part (literally, a wing) of the skirt of the royal cloak (v. 4). But he speedily regretted this act; his heart...
